Clinton takes office, promises bold action

by Terence Hunt
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON -- William Jefferson Clinton was inaugurated the 42nd president of the United States on Wednesday in a sunsplashed ceremony at the Capitol, ushering in a new generation of leadership and pledging to "face hard truths and take strong steps."

Clinton called for national renewal but acknowledged, "It will not be easy; it will require sacrifice." He specified none in his inaugural address, leaving that for later.

Clinton used the word change 11 times, and promised his Democratic administration would end the "deadlock and drift" of government.

Pennsylvania Avenue was lined with well wishers as the Clintons walked several blocks of the parade route to their new home at the White House.

Outgoing President Bush watched stoically as Clinton was sworn in by Chief Justice William Rehnquist. Bush stepped forward to shake his successor's hand.

Bush flew home to Houston, ending a quarter century of public service and 12 years of Republican rule in the White House.

At 46, Clinton is the nation's third youngest president and the first of the postwar Baby Boom generation to sit in the White House.

Bush was the fourth oldest chief executive when he was sworn in at 64.

In his speech, remarkable for its brevity at 14 minutes, Clinton saluted Bush but lamented the state of the nation.

"Raised in unrivaled prosperity, we inherit an economy still the world's strongest but weakened by business failures, stagnant wages, increasing inequality and deep divisions among our people," Clinton said. He decried the high costs of health care, the scourge of crime and the hardships suffered by millions of poor children.

Cheers, whistles and applause swelled from the 250,000 people at the Capitol. Around the world, countless millions paused to watch the ceremony.

Untested in foreign affairs, Clinton was forceful in expressing his resolve.

"When our vital interests are challenged, or the will and conscience of the international community defied, we will act -- with peaceful diplomacy when possible, with force when necessary. The brave Americans serving our nation in the Persian Gulf, in Somalia and wherever else they stand are testament to our resolve."

Clinton was the first president since Richard Nixon to take office with American troops on combat duty. Iraq appeared to be abiding by the cease-fire it offered Clinton but there was a fresh challenge, as Baghdad promised to rebuild a factory devastated by a U.S. cruise missile attack.

The Senate confirmed the nominations of key members of Clinton's cabinet: Warren Christopher, secretary of state; Les Aspin at defense; and Lloyd Bentsen at treasury.

Clinton stayed up until the early hours of Wednesday talking with Vice President-to-be Al Gore about the days ahead. "I didn't get much sleep," Clinton told lawmakers at a Capital luncheon. He raised his glass to toast "a new partnership in America's government."

House Speaker Thomas Foley pledged cooperation from congressional Democrats. "We will match your proposals with our strong effort to move the country toward fundamental change."

At 11:58 a.m., two minutes ahead of schedule, Clinton raised his right hand and recited the simple 35-word oath used by George Washington and every American president thereafter.

Toledoans have high hopes for Clinton

by The Associated Press

TOLEDO -- During a campaign stop in October, presidential candidate Bill Clinton promised six people he shared breakfast with that he would make things better for them.

On Wednesday, as Clinton became the nation's 42nd president, five of the six said they hoped he would deliver on that promise.

The sixth, Doug Funsett of suburban Maumee, could not be reached to comment Wednesday. There was no answer at his home.

"I have a lot of hope in Clinton," said Jim Paszczykowski, 41, an electrician.

Paszczykowski was unemployed when he met Clinton at Bud and Luke restaurant. Three weeks later, he got a job with a Sun Oil project and has worked steadily since.

"At the time, I was just about out of unemployment benefits and I was tearing my hair out. I'm not as gloomy as I was, not with a paycheck in my pocket," he said.

Clinton had breakfast with the six to talk about the problems facing this economically depressed city. The six were selected by leaders of various local agencies.

In the past decade, Toledo has lost thousands of manufacturing jobs. In the last three years, more than 15,000 jobs have been eliminated or moved elsewhere.

Lisa Anderson has moved from a part-time job as a licensed practical nurse to full-time employment at a mental health center.

"I still think he is fabulous. We voted for change and he's going to do it. I really believe that. I have all the confidence in the world in him," said Ms. Anderson, 23.

Aaron Pishalski, 24, was working in his parents' store and living at home after graduating from college. He now is a management trainee for Meier's store.

"I liked Clinton then and I still like him. But I worry a little that people might be expecting too much from what they heard during the campaign," Pishalski said.

Girder Talk

The BG News/Tim Norman

Working on the skeleton of the new building behind the Business Administration Building, two Rudolph/Libbe Inc. contract workers talk while securing part of the roof sections Wednesday afternoon. The 95,000 square foot building will cost $13.5 million and is being paid for by state funding. It will contain teleconferencing rooms, lecture rooms and other rooms for different-sized classes. The building will begin serving students and faculty in the 1994 spring semester.

Trustees appointed to fill vacancies

by Julie Tagliaterra administration reporter

Two new members were appointed to the University Board of Trustees earlier this week, filling two seats vacated in December.

Gov. George Voinovich appointed David Bryan and Valerie Newell to the board, according to Andy Futey, special assistant to the governor for boards and commissions.

Last December former trustees Nick Mileti and Herbert Moorehead received notification from Voinovich that they were ineligible to be trustees because they were not Ohio residents.

Moorehead and Mileti did not attend the Dec. 11 Board of Trustees meeting, and since then the University administration has been awaiting the decision of the governor to select replacements.

Lester Barber, executive assistant to President Paul Olscamp

"The competition for membership to the board is pretty keen, so the [University] tries to stay out of it. It is a very political process and it is better to avoid direct involvement unless asked by the governor."

Phil Mason, University Relations vice president said Futey called his office Tuesday informing him of the appointments.

However, Barber said neither he nor Olscamp has received a formal written notification from the governor's office about the appointments. In addition, Barber said he is uncertain if John Mahaney, chairman of the trustees, is aware of the appointments since he is out of town and could not be contacted.

According to Barber, since the February trustee meeting has been canceled, Bryan and Newell will not meet with the trustees collectively until the April meeting.

An orientation session for Bryan and Newell will occur at the University sometime before the April meeting so they can become affiliated with the board's policies and the University.

Although Barber has not received written notification of the appointments, he said he is pleased with the governor's action.

"We do miss -- and we will continue to miss -- Mr. Mileti and Mr. Moorehead," Barber said. "But given what happened, [the administration] is happy the governor has appointed replacements in a timely fashion."

According to Phil Mason, vice president for University Relations, the University administration was not involved in the governor's decision to appoint Bryan and Newell, nor was he consulted when Moorehead and Mileti were dismissed.

"The competition for membership to the board is pretty keen, so the [University] tries to stay out of it," Mason said. "It is a very political process and it is better to avoid direct involvement unless asked by the governor."

Potential trustee members receive nominations, given to the governor, from politicians and others in leadership positions, Mason said.

Barber said both Bryan and Newell have been active in various activities and organizations at the University prior to being appointed to the board.

"Both of these people have had direct contact with the University in the past and those [trustee members and administrators] who know them, know they will be excellent additions to the board," Barber said.

Mason said both Bryan and Newell have been contributors and supporters to the University for several years.

"I approve the governor's appointments because they will help the University in a number of ways," Mason said. "Both will be terrific additions to the board."

Bryan graduated from Muskingum College and received his law degree from the University of Toledo. He is a partner in the law firm of Wasserman, Bryan, Landry & Honold in Toledo. In addition, he is a member of the board of directors of Mid Am, Inc.

Mayberry comes under scrutiny

When Wood County Prosecutor Alan Mayberry was running for re-election, he vowed he would seek the death penalty for now-convicted murderer John Umbel.

The evidence in the prosecution's case against Umbel was so strong, defense attorneys Adrian Cimerman and John Duffin did not even bother to dispute it during the trial. In fact, Cimerman told The News before the verdict was even handed down that he "fully believed" his client would be found guilty.

But all of Mayberry's hard work and evidence to get the aggravated murder conviction needed to pursue the death penalty may be foiled by a small, alleged technical error in Umbel's indictment.

Because of supposed poor wording of the grand jury indictment, Umbel may be saved from the possibility of the death penalty.

How could Mayberry presumably overlook any detail in a case this big?

Although we at The News are not saying we support the death penalty, we are saying that an oversight like this makes one wonder about how some cases are handled.

A sampling of some recent cases exhibits many oversights made by the prosecutor's office.

In 1989, Mayberry released the taped confession of accused killer Richard Fox to the office of the Clerk of Courts -- making it accessible to the media months before Fox was scheduled to go on trial. The confession, or excerpts from it, were printed in many local papers and broadcast during some area radio and television newscasts.

Fox's defense attorney, John Callahan, attempted to have a change of venue due to the large amount of media attention the confession received. When that failed, Fox elected to have his trial before a panel of three judges. He was convicted and received the death penalty.

However, Fox is still appealing the case through Callahan, who is using the release of the confession as the main argument in the appeal.

In 1992, Scott Riddle and Steve Woodworth, the two men accused of killing their roommate, Joy Hiser, were indicted for murder. Later that year, they both pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter, which carries a maximum penalty 25 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

According to an anonymous source, the Riddle and Woodworth cases were "textbook examples" of aggravated murder, since the men allegedly killed Hiser because they were afraid she would report them for supposedly stealing some of her checks. However, Mayberry indicted the men for murder, for which the penalties were less steep.

Of course, a few cases do not make up a whole career. Mayberry's record overall as prosecutor has a conviction rate that has been stated as high as 90 percent. By all means, the prosecutor is an experienced attorney. He is not incompetent. And he seems to care deeply about his work and recognize the human factor involved in court cases. That is why The News endorsed Mayberry for re-election last year.

But it is these gaps of poor judgment that can jeopardize major cases and destroy all that Alan Mayberry has worked to achieve in his 13 years at the prosecutor's office. More importantly, future oversights like these could someday have bigger consequences -- possibly letting a murderer or rapist go free. That's when small errors aren't so small after all.

Today's 'patriots' dubious

One of the most fascinating things about language is that the meanings of words change over time. Occasionally, the transformation is so radical that the new meaning is almost the exact opposite of the original meaning. Fortunately, for daily communication, it usually takes centuries for changes as drastic as this to occur.

An example of a word whose meaning has gone through considerable change is the term "patriot." My unabridged dictionary defines a patriot as "A person who loves, supports and defends his or her country and its interests with devotion."

There is little argument over the identity of our nation's first patriots. Their names are indelibly etched in our culture's consciousness. People like George Washington, Paul Revere, Patrick Henry, Abraham Lincoln. The selfless actions of these men earned them not only our eternal gratitude but also a permanent place in our nation's history.

But times change, and, apparently, so do the actions that define patriotism. The surprising thing is that while it usually takes centuries for a word's meaning to shift substantially, it has taken a mere 45 years for "patriot" to acquire a meaning that is far different than its original. So different, in fact, that one might wonder if perhaps a new word should be coined to describe people like George Washington and Patrick Henry.

Beginning with the 1950s, the term "patriot" described men like Senator Joseph McCarthy, the infamous Communist hunter whose favorite tactic was publicly accusing people of treasonous behavior without ever presenting any evidence to support his claim. Joe's own patriotism went largely unquestioned until he began accusing people in the State Department and the military of being Communist sympathizers. Then, like a dog whose leash has just been given a tremendous yank, McCarthy vanished from the public's eye leaving a stream of wrecked careers, ruined reputations and national paranoia in his wake.

In the 1960s, "patriot" referred to soldiers who participated in the Pentagon's war on the defenseless peasants of Southeast Asia. At the same time, the term "unpatriotic" was applied to concerned citizens who organized demonstrations to protest the senseless (and illegal) slaughter. Those who were "unpatriotic" weren't very effective, though. Before the war was over, nearly 2 million Vietnamese, Cambodians and Laotians had died -- along with 58,000 patriotic Americans.

In the 1970s, the term "patriot" was applied to members of the CIA who engaged in covert operations aimed at undermining foreign governments -- usually through assassination. Some of the greatest CIA patriots helped foment a coup against Chile's legally elected leader, Salvador Allende. This act of selfless patriotism resulted in Mr. Allende's neutralization (CIA jargon for death.)

The 1980s saw a subtle shift in the evolving meaning of "patriot." During this decade, the term was used to denote any high ranking government official who disregarded Congress' prohibition on supplying military aid to the murderous Nicaraguan Contras and who then lied to Congress and the American people about their actions. Perhaps the greatest patriot of this period was a certain Marine lieutenant-colonel employed by the White House who lied to Congress and then shredded documents which chronicled the illegal actions of a host of high government officials, not the least of whom was the president of the United States.

Though the 1990s have barely begun, it looks as though we're in for some surprising changes in the definition of "patriot." As of 1991, the term referred to soldiers who took part in bombing Iraqi civilian installations such as water purification plants, electrical generating facilities and air raid shelters during the Gulf war. Once again, the greatest patriots appear to be Navy aviators who trapped and then unleashed a firestorm of violence on retreating Iraqi soldiers -- a flagrant violation of the Hague and Geneva Conventions concerning warfare. The attacks continued until there were no signs of life.

It is difficult to comment on changes in language which are only now occurring. As of Christmas Eve 1992, the most current meaning of "patriot" is once again a high ranking government official who lies repeatedly to Congress about his knowledge of the illegalities surrounding the trading of arms for hostages. Indeed, had it not been for Caspar Weinberger's personal journal detailing the secret arms for hostages tradeoff and the role of former President Reagan and Vice-President Bush, we would never have known how much of a "patriot" the former secretary of defense actually was.

But the meaning of "patriot" is not the only thing to have undergone a dramatic transformation. Whereas patriots up to and including World War II received medals of commendation for their exemplary service to the nation, that practice now seems all but abandoned. Recently, the honor most likely to be bestowed on patriots is the coveted "Presidential Pardon." My, how times have changed.

Man claims Holocaust fiction, student calls him 'uneducated'

To the Editor:

Not long ago, a man had appeared on our campus handing out literature both twisted and uneducated. He would not give his name. His sole purpose was to continue the near 50 years of post-Holocaust anti-semitism. We, the Jewish population of Bowling Green, have only now come together in anger to rectify the truth. Given the time period elapsed since his visit to Bowling Green, we can only hope our words will still leave an impact to those with listening hearts and minds.

His testimony was basic enough -- in short, to contradict the events in Western Europe from 1939-1945. The Holocaust, he said, never occurred. Yet, if this is true, how can one explain the simple truth of one man (or are there more?) and his ambitious extermination of a peaceful civilization? How can we explain the Holocaust Commission -- it was founded for the erection of landmarks and museums to remember what "must never be forgotten?" How can we explain the professors, courses and textbooks on the Holocaust on college campuses across the world? And, with a horrific irony, how would it then be possible to dismiss the footage and photographs of Jewish victims of gas chambers and crematoriums taken by "camera crazy Germans bent on recording their proud deeds for prosperity?"

Our purpose in writing this is not what is commonly referred to as a "sermon." We only pray that ignorance of this matter be abolished. Well over 5,000 years of anti-semitism is long enough.

They say history repeats itself. God forbid we allow it to.

CLARIFICATIONS

In Tuesday's story "Student pleads guilty; forgery, telephone harassment among charges," The News may have implied that University student Anthony Hunt is currently AWOL from the U.S. Army. Actually, Hunt was reported in court documents to have been AWOL at an earlier date, and he was cleared of these charges before the arrest.

In Wednesday's letter, "USG chief illogical," The News may have misconstrued a portion of Michael D. Brennan's letter, which could have been interpreted to say that Scott Ziance represents all students who attend classes in the BA. Mr. Brennan's statement should have said he didn't think Ziance was "much of a student voice ... except for the scant handful of students who meet in 112 BA every Tuesday night at 9 p.m."

Shuttle service more accessible

Reverse route, airport and field house stops add convenience

by Jeni Bond
student government reporter

Students may find the shuttle bus more convenient this semester with one bus following its traditional route and the second bus traveling in the reverse direction.

Shuttle bus driver Jim Beaupre said so far there has not been any problems with the new system.

"It may take a month or so for students to catch on to how [the shuttle] is running. More students have been riding the main route rather than the reverse."

Undergraduate Student Government President Jason Jackson said he is partially satisfied with the changes. USG proposed both a bi-directional shuttle and an express shuttle last semester to the Department of Traffic and Parking.

"It would be great if we could get an express shuttle," Jackson said. "[But] the bi-directional is also expanding students' options."

An express shuttle, as proposed, would run from the Mileti Visitor's Center to the Jerome Library to the University Union and back to the Mileti Visitor's Center. The express shuttle would require another bus and another driver.

Beaupre said the department requested another bus, but was turned down.

"For an express route we would have to pull one [bus] out of the main route," he said. "If two buses followed the main route and one followed the reverse, I think it would work beautifully. We just don't have the money."

Changes in the shuttle system came after students were asked their opinions about the routes in a survey. According to Jackson, 86 percent of the students surveyed said they liked the shuttle as it was, but would like the addition of a bi-directional route.

The new bi-directional route is only being implemented on a trial basis, according to Jackson. The success of the new route will be determined in the spring.

The bi-directional bus is marked in big, red letters to let riders know which bus is going in which direction, Beaupre said.

Also, two additions have been made to the shuttle routes. The bus now stops at both the Wood County Airport and the Falcon Fieldhouse.

Jackson said the changes in the system are good but shouldn't stop here.

"We should always strive to do better in areas of student services," he said. "We have made the first step and now we need to go further."

The department of Parking and Traffic also will offer one semester parking passes next fall, according to Jackson. Last semester USG proposed one semester passes to benefit students who wouldn't be at the University the entire academic year.

The one semester pass will cost $20 as compared to the current academic year price of $30. Jackson said the single semester pass will be better for students.

"Previously there had been no option for single semester permits," he said. "It was inconvenient for students."

A Parking and Traffic official who wishes to remain anonymous said the University has the cheapest parking of any university in the state of Ohio.

Police still search for alleged rapist, submit safety tips

Bowling Green police are still searching for the man who allegedly attempted to rape a 21-year-old Lehman Avenue resident Saturday.

The suspect may also be responsible for sexually assaulting as many as three other women in October and November, police said.

Bowling Green Police Chief Galen Ash said that with the suspect still eluding police, women should be aware and take precautions now more than ever. He added that although rape victims are not to blame for their attacks, they have a better chance of avoiding the emotional and physical pain of rape if they follow some safety guidelines.

"I could walk down a street in Toledo with $100 bills sticking out of my pockets, but I'd probably be killed," he said. "It shouldn't be that way, but it is. It's just a matter of being safe."

Also, since the four sexual assault victims were awakened by their attackers in either their homes or while staying at a friend's home, people should also take some precautions in their residences, police sources said. The following are some basic guidelines suggested by Ash and various health and safety agencies:

AT HOME:

□ Make sure all doors are locked. In three of the four sexual assault reports, a door to the residence had been left unlocked.

□ Leave on lights, potential attackers will hesitate to enter the house if they think someone is awake in the house.

IN GENERAL:

□ Stay in well-lit areas and avoid walking alone.

□ Carrying large purses or packages can slow you down. It also helps to have your car or house keys ready so you won't have to fumble for them later, not paying attention to what is going on around you.

□ Don't get into a car with or offer a ride to a stranger or someone you don't know very well.

□ When going out, go home with the people with whom you went. Don't go home with a "friend of a friend."

□ Don't drink heavily. Also, be wary of anyone who is intoxicated.

□ Be skeptical of someone who wants you to go into a room or house alone with to "see something." If you go, take friends along.

New political group hits campus

by Jami Norviel
student organization reporter

College students have often been stereotyped as politically active, a stereotype that often proves to be true.

For those who are not involved with politics, now may be the chance because a new political group is forming on campus. Students for Democratic Leadership is an organization interested in promoting the investigation of current political policies and procedures through group discussions, panel discussions and debates.

University students Michael Brennan and Mike Sears founded the group. In an attempt to become well-known on campus, several meetings and activities have been organized.

Tuesday evening an organizational meeting took place to get input as to what potential members would like to get from the group.

"What I'm interested in doing is what you're interested in doing," Brennan said.

Brennan said he wants the group as a whole to decide what issues would be discussed, as well as which speakers would be invited to the meetings.

"In other words, I want to make it everybody's group," he said.

SDL is interested in getting more people involved in Ohio Young Democrats since there isn't an official Bowling Green chapter.

A member who pays a $3 dues fee will be automatically enrolled

"This group gives us the opportunity to debate issues -- national, state and even local issues," Sears said.

Mike Sears, Students for Democratic Leadership co-founder in Ohio Young Democrats, as well as gaining SDL voting privileges. Members may also opt for a $2 dues fee which does not include enrollment.

"This group gives us the opportunity to debate issues -- national, state and even local issues," Sears said.

Brennan said the group would like to do more than just talk about issues. The organization will try to focus on taking action on certain issues.

Topics discussed Tuesday evening were the redistricting debate being discussed by city and USG officials, the inauguration of President Clinton and Clinton's future plans.

Anyone interested in becoming involved with Students for Democratic Leadership should contact either Michael Brennan or Mike Sears.

Umbel's medical records discussed

Sentencing hearings continued Wednesday for convicted murderer John Umbel as attorneys argued over the admission of defense evidence.

The defense and prosecution argued about the admission of Umbel's medical records from several hospitals, including Wood County Medical Center. Arguments were also heard about the admission of victim impact testimony.

The hearings are scheduled to continue at the Wood County Court House Feb. 1.

Consolidation of weapons facilities may save money

by The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Energy Department renewed its support Tuesday for a proposed consolidation in Kansas City, Mo., of part of the government's nuclear weapons production, including work now done at the Mound Plant near Dayton, Ohio.

Outgoing Energy Secretary James D. Watkins concluded the move to Kansas City was the most effective plan for streamlining non-nuclear weapons production work. He forwarded a report to House and Senate committees on the consolidation's costs.

Watkins said in a statement that the move would save money and reduce health, safety and environmental risks of the government's weapons production network.

"Consolidation will help the department maintain the specialized skills needed to produce and test non-nuclear components as budgets continue to shrink," Watkins said.

The department has proposed shifting most non-nuclear production to Kansas City and closing Mound, the Pinellas plant near Clearwater, Fla., and the Rocky Flats plant near Denver, Colo. The report said the consolidation could save up to $250 million a year.

The move would cost about 1,000 jobs at Mound.

At issue are plants that make nuclear bomb components such as triggers, security devices and guidance mechanisms. They are called non-nuclear because the components don't contain radioactive material.

The plant in Kansas City is owned by the government and operated through a contract with Allied Signal Inc. It employs about 5,700 people and is about 12 miles south of downtown Kansas City.

Last week, Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., disclosed the department had approved the consolidation report, which was ordered by Congress at the request of Ohio lawmakers who oppose the agency's plan.

A report by the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, had disputed the Energy Department's findings.

Opponents have questioned previous estimates by the department that the consolidation would save money.

Southern State official quits

by John Nolan
The Associated Press

HILLSBORO, Ohio — The board chairman of Southern State Community College said Wednesday he is resigning because he believes state officials are punishing the school for starting investigations of alleged illegal contributions to lawmakers.

"I'm fed up with all this," William Stapleton told The Associated Press in a telephone interview. Stapleton has served the past two years as chairman of the trustees board and one year as vice chairman.

Stapleton said he planned to announce his immediate resignation at the board's meeting Wednesday night. His chairmanship term was to end then, but Stapleton said he also will end his board term, which runs until spring 1994.

Stapleton, a Brown County Common Pleas judge, said he is convinced the school is being punished for helping start state and federal investigations in 1990 into whether Southern State and other two-year colleges illegally used school money to make campaign contributions to state legislators.

The Ohio Board of Regents pressured Southern State to accept an examination by three out-of-state educators of the college's operation, Stapleton said. The state also has consistently refused to grant Southern State's requests for capital spending money for building projects, he said.

"I resisted it for over a year," Stapleton said of the study. "We were told we would do this or we wouldn't get capital projects money."

State officials have said a federal grand jury will soon be meeting in Cincinnati to hear evidence in the case.

The state investigation resulted in charges against 18 current or former presidents of two-year colleges. Harold Roach, former executive director of the 23-college Ohio Technical and Community College Association, also was charged.

Fourteen of the presidents agreed to enter diversion programs that could result in the charges being dropped. Four other presidents and Roach have pleaded innocent. They face trials in Columbus.

Student enrollment has been increasing at Southern State's three campuses, and the school needs more space, Stapleton said.

William Napier, a vice chancellor of the Ohio Board of Regents who asked for the study, said the examination of Southern State is not intended as punishment.

"It's certainly not meant to be punitive. ... It's not to investigate them, it's to work with them on an analysis of programming needs," Napier said.

Senators support open government

by Robert E. Miller
The Associated Press

COLUMBUS — Seven senators agreed Wednesday to co-sponsor a bipartisan bill they said would give Ohio one of the most comprehensive open-government laws in the nation.

Sen. Scott Oelslager, R-Canton, the chief sponsor, said he will introduce the proposal Thursday along with two other Republicans and four Democrats.

The bill bans closed legislative committee meetings except when members vote to meet privately — an exception allowed by the Ohio Constitution.

It requires legislative committees, including conference committees that resolve disputes on major items such as the state budget, to give notice of their meetings 24 hours in advance.

Currently, conference committees need not give advance notice, and those studying the budget often have met privately in the past.

Oelslager said the only meetings in the Legislature not covered by the bill are party caucuses.

He said he excluded them because caucuses do not take formal actions and usually take place to map strategy or formulate policy.

The bill makes it easier to sue agencies that illegally withhold records by making them pay lawyers on both sides and court costs when challenged successfully in court.

Local agencies that violate

"We are entering a new era of change in government. We need to do what we can to make it easier for people to participate in the government process. I believe the more open we become, the more credible our government will be."

Sen. Scott Oelslager,

the open-meetings laws could be fined $500.

Oelslager's proposal creates a commission to review access to ethics and other committees that now operate mostly in private.

The commission would make a study and issue a report within a year.

Oelslager has introduced similar proposals before. He offered one last fall when the Legislature was wrestling with a budget deficit and other major problems. The measure didn't get a hearing.

He said there is now more interest.

"We've got more support than we've ever had before," he said.

Oelslager said he thinks the legislation is gaining support because of a mood for change among voters.

"I'm still divorced, I still have two kids. I'm still tending bar two nights a week. And I'm still going to school," she said.

She said she is most concerned about health-care reform and Clinton's proposal to exchange college tuition for public service.

"All the experts say they are both going to be impossible to do, but at least Clinton hasn't said that. Give him some time and the benefit of the doubt," she said.

Life hasn't improved for Ernestine Murphy, 45, who was laid off from the Dura Corp. plant last year.

"I'm still poor and I'm still broke. I still can't find a job," she said.

She started training three weeks ago as a medical assistant. But she said she's convinced that factory jobs such as the one she had at Dura, "just don't exist anymore."

"It's hard out there. Truly hard. Factory work is no profession and people who have factory jobs are blessed," she said.

She said she doesn't trust politicians — including Clinton.

"You can only believe half of what they say, but I'm still hoping it's going to get better," she said.

Hate crimes on the rise

All racial groups involved, new study reports

by Christopher Sullivan
The Associated Press

NORTH CHARLESTON, S.C. — People can't stop talking about the crimes, partly because of their brutality — a woman here gang-raped and murdered, a man in Florida doused with gasoline and set afire — but also because of a question that makes folks shudder.

Were the victims singled out because of their race?

In the Tampa case, the victim was black and all three suspects white. Here, the victim was white and all eight suspects black.

"I'd like to know what they were thinking," said Mike Kelley of North Charleston, who lives a few trailers down from the scene of the rape and knew some of the suspects as neighbors. He and others shook their heads while discussing the case on a recent rainy evening.

To many in the South and elsewhere, racially motivated crimes seem like throwbacks to the days of lynchings generations ago, or to more recent times when official segregation created suspicion, tension and hatred between blacks and whites.

"We've come a long way," insisted Frank Binarr, another disbelieving neighbor here. "Whites and blacks get along."

Even if that is broadly true, racially-motivated violence is nonetheless on the rise, the numbers indicate.

More than 50 murders across the United States in 1991 and '92 were classified as hate crimes by Klanwatch, a research group in Birmi-ingham, Ala., that has monitored hate group activity since 1979.

"Hate crimes used to be strictly white on black. Now, it's every racial group," said Klanwatch researcher Angie Lowry. As she worked on an analysis of 1992 data, she said, "Hate crimes in just about every category are up."

A just-released study of 10 cities' 1992 police figures found a 24 percent rise in bias crimes from '91. The study, prepared for the Los Angeles law firm Stroock & Stroock & Lavan, was part of a U.S. Supreme Court brief in defense of a Wisconsin law increasing penalties for hate-motivated crimes.

In some ways, the Florida and South Carolina crimes were mirror images, with numerous eerie parallels but the races of victim and attackers reversed.

Both victims, authorities say, were chosen at random.

Christopher Wilson, 31, a black New York tourist, was abducted at gunpoint from a Tampa-area shopping center on New Year's Day. Police say he was driven to an isolated area, robbed, doused with gasoline and set ablaze.

Burned over 40 percent of his body, he remains hospitalized. Three white men who worked in a local labor pool have been charged with attempted murder.

Just two days earlier in North Charleston, police say, 25-year-old Melissa McLaughlin was abducted while walking across a street, taken to a trailer park, raped by at least five men, then driven out of town, shot six times and dumped on a rural road.

Five men have been arrested and a sixth is being sought on murder, rape and related charges; two women have been charged as accessories. All the suspects are black.

In each case, there is chilling evidence that race was at least part of the motive.

In Tampa, investigators found a note that read: "One less nigger, one more to go." It was signed "KKK," but the suspects have denied being part of any hate group and Ku Klux Klan officials have denied involvement.

Wilson told police his abductors taunted him with racial slurs; FBI agents are looking into possible civil rights charges.

In South Carolina, detectives believe race was a motive for at least two of Ms. McLaughlin's attackers. "There's no question that they were looking for a white woman," said Police Detective C.W. "Butch" Henery, noting that others involved had unrelated motives that he would not specify.

One suspect, Matthew Mack, reportedly told police the attack was in response to "400 years of oppression" since slaves arrived in the United States.

In the car believed to have been used in the abduction, authorities also found a written document. Police said it contained "some profound racial language — talking about oppression by whites against blacks," according to Harve Jacobs, a North Charleston city spokesman.

Clinton fills top State Department positions

by Barry Schwed
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President-elect Clinton turned to cloistered think tanks and urbane retired diplomats to fill top State Department jobs on Tuesday. He also broke tradition by creating a senior post to help frame foreign policy on environmental, human rights and refugee issues.

The new job will be filled by Tim Wirth, a liberal Colorado Democrat who retired from the Senate last year.

Peter Tarnoff, who was a top aide to Secretaries of State Cyrus R. Vance and Edmund S. Muskie in the Carter administration, was named under secretary for political affairs.

Winston Lord, a former U.S. ambassador to China who was sharply critical of the Bush administration's go-slow approach to human rights abuses there, will return to the government as the assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific affairs.

A council board member, Strobe Talbott, an author and journalist who translated the memoirs of the late Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev, was named to a new post to coordinate aid to the Commonwealth of Independent States and to Eastern Europe.

Stephen A. Oxman, was named assistant secretary of state for European affairs. He is a lawyer who worked in the Carter administration for Secretary of State-designate Warren M. Christopher.

Head of the Near East bureau went to a holdover, career diplomat Edward P. Djerejian, a former U.S. ambassador to Syria who helped arrange the Mideast peace talks.

Latin American affairs will remain in the hands of Bernard Aronson, a conservative Democrat who has held the post of assistant secretary during the Bush administration. A Cuban American lawyer, Mario Leon Baeza, had been slated for the job but was not on the list of appointees announced Tuesday.

Also, Dennis Ross, a top aide to former Secretary of State James A. Baker III, is expected to be retained for at least six months as a senior consultant. Ross headed the policy planning staff. That job is going to Samuel W. Lewis, a former U.S. ambassador to Israel who is currently president of the United States Institute of Peace, a government-financed research group that promotes peaceful settlements of international conflicts.

Other appointments included:

□ Career foreign service officer George E. Moose as assistant secretary for African affairs.

□ Joan E. Spero, Under Secretary for Economic & Agricultural Affairs. She is a top official at American Express Co.

□ Lynn Davis, Under Secretary for International Security Affairs.

Nuclear dump blocked

by Bob Egelko
The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — A federal judge Tuesday blocked the Bush administration from transferring Mojave Desert land to the state of California for a nuclear waste dump.

U.S. District Judge Marilyn Hall Patel expressed concern about the hasty attempt to approve the project in the final weeks of the Bush administration, and prohibited the transfer until at least next week.

"We got a lot of what we wanted, (a chance) to have the new administration take a look at it seriously," said Hannah Bentley, a lawyer for environmental groups challenging the project.

Though the views of Interior Secretary-designate Bruce Babbitt on the issue aren't known, opponents of the waste dump hope for a better reception from Babbitt than they got from Interior Secretary Manuel Lujan.

Ron Gaynor, senior vice president of US Ecology, operator of the proposed waste dump, said delay of the dump would hurt medical researchers in California, who are running out of room to store nuclear wastes.

Opponents of the project say researchers account for only a small fraction of the wastes to be stored.

Both Stephanie Hanna, a spokeswoman for Lujan, and Kassy Perry, a spokeswoman for Gov. Pete Wilson, declined comment.

The 1,000-acre site at Ward Valley, west of Needles in San Bernardino County, would be the state's first disposal site for low-level nuclear wastes from power plants and medical and research facilities. The federally-owned land is inhabited by the desert tortoise, a threatened species, and lies above an underground water basin that drains into the Colorado River.

Prodded by Wilson, Lujan agreed Jan. 7 to transfer the land to the state, the crucial step needed before US Ecology could be granted a license and start work at the site.

Several environmental groups immediately sued, saying Lujan had never complied with a law requiring him to identify critical habitat for the desert tortoise. Designation of the land as critical habitat would be a serious obstacle to development.

The groups also argued the Bush administration was short-circuiting a normal 30-day review process in order to complete the deal before leaving office.

At the hearing, the judge said environmental groups were likely to be able to prove Lujan had violated the law.

Va. inmate electrocuted

by The Associated Press

JARRATT, Va. — A disabled death-row inmate was executed in Virginia's electric chair Tuesday night for the slayings of three workers at the restaurant where he was a short-order cook.

Charles Stamper, 39, was pronounced dead at 11:15 p.m. at Greensville Correctional Center, said Wayne Brown, the prison's operations officer.

Brown said prison guards held Stamper by the shoulders and helped him walk to the electric chair. Stamper had requested to use leg braces and a walker so he could take the last few steps on his own.

Stamper was on death row longer than any other Virginia inmate. He had used a wheelchair since his spinal cord was injured in a 1988 fight with other inmates.

Earlier Tuesday, U.S. District Judge James R. Spencer and the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals had refused to halt the execution. The U.S. Supreme Court denied the request without comment at 9:25 p.m.

Defense attorneys had argued there was insufficient evidence to prove Stamper was the triggerman.

Victims' relatives as well as death penalty opponents waited outside the prison as the execution approached. Brown said members of Stamper's family arrived at the prison Tuesday morning to visit the inmate.

"I think it's a shame it took 14 years to do it," said Clyde Vie, a brother of slaying victim Agnes Hicks.

"I'm personally sorry this man is going to be executed, and this is my prayer for him," said Suzie Hudenburg of Richmond.

Ten-year old girl details events of captivity, abuse

by Pat Millon
The Associated Press

BAY SHORE, N.Y. — Ten-year-old Katie Beers said in a detailed statement her captor threatened to hang himself shortly before telling police about the underground dungeon where she was held for 16 days.

A source close to the case read The Associated Press excerpts from a transcript of the girl's statement she gave police hours after her release.

The source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Tuesday Katie sat informally, snacking on soda and potato chips, as she gave her statement to a female detective Wednesday.

"Last night, I told John that I was sick and I had to see a doctor. He said, 'You're going to have to wait,' and he left," said Katie.

"Before he left, he told me that he was going to hang himself and leave a note on him and the police would find me today."

Instead, John Esposito, 43, went to his attorney, and eventually led police to an elaborately concealed, underground vault beneath his Bay Shore home, where Katie was found.

On Tuesday, a prosecutor told a judge a Suffolk County grand jury had returned an indictment against Esposito on charges that were not immediately made public.

A source familiar with the investigation said the indictment includes kidnapping, sex abuse and other charges.

Katie told police that on Dec. 28, she and Esposito had bought a doll and gone to a convenience store and then to his house, where she played a "Home Alone" video game.

"Then he started kissing me. ... He started unrolling the rugs and then I was in like a cave. I was in a tunnel. ... John was pulling me through.

He said he was going to kidnap me," she said.

She said Esposito told her "to make a recording to play to Aunt Linda. ... He told me to say a man kidnapped me and he has a knife."

"John came down with some food after the police left. He came down once a day with food. I asked him to come down twice a day. But he said no, because 'The police are on my case.'"

Katie Beers

Instead, "John went upstairs for something, so I made another tape telling Aunt Linda Big John had me," she said, referring to her godmother, Linda Inghilleri.

When Esposito heard what she'd done, he made her re-record the message, she said. "I was crying because I wanted to go home."

Beginning two days after her abduction, "He would handcuff me and had a chain around my neck. He did this because I was banging on the ceiling."

"I saw on the TV that the police were at the house. He had a (surveillance) camera that showed the outside. I was banging on the ceiling but they didn't hear me."

"John came down with some food after the police left. He came down once a day with food. I asked him to come down twice a day. But he said no, because 'The police are on my case.'"

At another point, Katie told police Esposito touched her in a sexual manner on several occasions during her captivity.

Inauguration day crisis-free

Pentagon reports smooth transition, but trouble still looms

by Robert Burns
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — As the nation watched a new commander in chief take the oath of office, a skeleton crew at the Pentagon kept watch Wednesday on the simmering military crises that President Clinton has inherited in Iraq and elsewhere.

The designated new secretary of defense, Les Aspin, had not yet been confirmed by the Senate when Clinton assumed power, but the nation's military structure from the Joint Chiefs of Staff on down remained intact.

"We have no break in continuity," said Col. Dave Burpee, head of the Pentagon's directorate for defense information, even though Clinton had filled none of the Defense Department's 44 political positions other than secretary of defense.

Iraqi guns and missiles, which had challenged U.S. and allied planes in the south and north of the country for a solid week, were silent Wednesday, and there was a hopeful sign in the Balkan crisis. But the Clinton administration still faced an extremely volatile world on its first day in power.

Nearly 25,000 American soldiers and Marines were carrying out Operation Restore Hope in lawless and famine-stricken Somalia; five Navy ships were joining a Coast Guard flotilla off the coast of Haiti hoping to forestall a flood of U.S.-bound refugees; and 1,300 Army soldiers were settling in in Kuwait.

Air Force cargo planes continued to fly humanitarian supplies into war-torn Sarajevo, and a Navy frigate was helping a NATO maritime team enforce a U.N. embargo against the former Yugoslavia. The parliament of Bosnia's Serbs approved a plan to end the fighting with neighboring Serbia, but it was not immediately clear what effect the vote would have on the civil war.

In his inauguration speech, Clinton paid tribute to "the brave Americans serving our nation today" in the Persian Gulf and elsewhere. And he said the United States must be ready to use power to defend more than just its own vital interests.

"When our vital interests are challenged, or the will and conscience of the international community is defied, we will act -- with peaceful diplomacy whenever possible, with force when necessary," he said.

Bush issued a special order Tuesday extending Cheney's term until Aspin took the oath of office.

Gen. Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, re-

"When our vital interests are challenged, or the will and conscience of the international community is defied, we will act -- with peaceful diplomacy whenever possible, with force when necessary."

President Clinton

In the morning hours before George Bush formally relinquished the White House, the Pentagon office of the secretary of defense, in the wood-paneled Eisenhower Corridor, was quiet except for the purring of a carpet shampooer and the stirrings of a single military aide. The customary door guard was absent.

Dick Cheney, who served nearly four years as Bush's defense secretary, stayed home on his final day, but the formal chain of command from the president to the uniformed military commanders was not mained the president's top military adviser. His term ends next fall. Although he technically is not part of the formal chain of command, he is an important link between the uniformed military

The transfer of political power had no direct effect on the nation's military structure, and the top echelons of the civilian leadership.

The uniformed leaders of the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine Corps also remained on duty.

Miami man shoots ex-wife during television interview

by The Associated Press

MIAMI — A man who fatally shot his ex-wife in front of a television camera near his daughter's grave was arrested Wednesday in Texas, authorities said.

Emilio Nunez, 34, who blamed his daughter's suicide on his former wife, tried to pull a gun on FBI agents who stopped a Greyhound Bus bound for Los Angeles near Fort Stockton, Texas, said Lt. Lou Cavallo of the North Lauderdale Police Department. Nunez was disarmed and arrested, Cavallo said.

Police received a tip through Dade County Crimestoppers that Nunez was on the bus. He faces state murder charges and federal charges for unlawful flight, and will be held pending a hearing to send him to Florida, said Cavallo.

The slaying occurred as Nunez was being interviewed Monday for the Spanish-language program "Occurrio Asi," or "It Happened Like This."

He and the television crew

"I want to find out why he killed her. I want to go to Texas to interview him again. I'm making arrangements."

Ingrid Cruz, reporter were at the North Lauderdale cemetery where his 15-year-old daughter, Yoandra Nunez, is buried. She killed herself Thanksgiving Day.

On the videotape, shown Tuesday on the Telemundo network and rebroadcast around the country, Nunez told reporter Ingrid Cruz that his daughter was abused by his ex-wife, Maritza Martin Munoz, 33. He said the girl committed suicide after her mother slapped her when the teen-ager revealed she was pregnant.

When the ex-wife pulled up to the cemetery, the tape showed Nunez pushing past Cruz and cameraman Jorge Delgado to fire into Martin's head at point-blank range.

Cruz said despite the violence, she was ready to interview Nunez again.

"I want to find out why he killed her," she told The Associated Press. "I want to go to Texas to interview him again. I'm making arrangements."

Nunez used a 9mm pistol to shoot his wife, but police did not immediately know if it is the same gun he tried to pull on FBI agents in Texas.

Nunez had fled immediately after the shooting, leaving his car in Hialeah. The weapon was not found inside.

As the reporter and cameraman fled, Nunez stood over Martin and fired repeatedly.

"I should have done it a long time ago!" he said afterward in Spanish.

Hickeys prohibited

by Lynn Elber
The Associated Press

Show a hickey, lose a day's pay. That's the new policy at a Southern California medical company that has banned those tell-tale marks of passion as unprofessional.

Why kiss off workers branded by love bites?

Because colleagues and patients complained, the Brawley-based Clinicas de Salud Del Pueblo Inc. says.

"They were visible and no effort was made to cover them," said Diana Tamez, personnel manager for the 115-employee firm in Imperial County, near the U.S.-Mexico border.

Hickeys long have been fodder for teen-age teasing. The Fox TV series "Beverly Hills, 90210" had character Brandon Walsh (Jason Priestly) suffer his friends' jabs after getting a hickey in a 1991 episode.

No snide remarks from adults, please. Even they react to the signs of zealous kissing, said Dr. Mark Goulston, assistant clinical professor of psychiatry at the University of California, Los Angeles.

Cease fire likely in Guatemala

UN asked to take role in resolving 'longest-standing conflict'

by Andrew Selsky
The Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS -- Guatemala's president said Tuesday his government was willing to sign a cease-fire with leftist rebels and asked the United Nations to monitor disbanding of the insurgents.

Peace talks stalled last August over how to enforce human rights guarantees in Guatemala.

There was no immediate comment from the rebel's National Revolutionary Union office in Mexico City.

Guatemalan President Jorge Serrano told the General Assembly a cease-fire "should be accepted now to put an end to the conflict. It reflects the government's fulfillment of the aspirations of our people for peace."

"We ask for the help of the international community in this oldest conflict, the longest-standing conflict in Latin America."

Guatemalan President Jorge Serrano

Serrano said he asked Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali to take steps to have the world body monitor disbanding of the rebels and proposed guerrillas be restricted to areas decided by the government during demobilization.

U.N. spokesman Joe Sills said the Security Council would have to approve any such monitoring since it would involve sending U.N. workers to Guatemala. No council meeting on the issue was scheduled as yet.

Serrano's request came a year after the United Nations mediated a peace agreement that ended the war in El Salvador, which borders Guatemala. The United Nations also helped end the war in Nicaragua.

"We ask for the help of the international community in this oldest conflict, the longest-standing conflict in Latin America," Serrano told delegates.

On Thursday, Serrano challenged the rebels to sign a peace accord within 90 days. He said then his government was ready to immediately sign an agreement on human rights and how to verify them. He also vowed to help ease the return of some 45,000 Guatemalan war refugees.

Relief officials have said 2,200 of the refugees will return to their homeland on Wednesday.

In his speech, Serrano did not offer concessions to the rebels and gave no terms for the cease-fire. He said the government would be willing to implement a cease-fire even if the rebels do not agree to peace within the 90-day period he offered last week.

Serbs consider peace proposal

The Associated Press

PALE, Bosnia-Herzegovina -- A self-proclaimed parliament of Bosnian Serbs met Tuesday to consider trading land and the right to their own borders for an end to Bosnia's bloody civil war.

Bosnia's Muslim and Croat factions have accepted the proposal by international mediators. Rejection by the Serbs could doom peace talks and lead to foreign military intervention.

Bitter debates dragged on for hours before the session in Pale, just east of Sarajevo, adjourned. It was scheduled to resume at 9 a.m. (3 a.m. EST) Wednesday.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said the outcome would be close and he could not predict which way it would go.

Seventy-one of the assembly's 81 members opened the plenary session with the old Serbian national anthem, "God of Justice," and a moment of silence for dead comrades.

The proposal by mediators Cyrus Vance of the United Nations and Lord Owen of the European Community would divide the former Yugoslav republic into 10 autonomous provinces.

Karadzic accepted the plan a week ago in Geneva on condition the Bosnian Serb assembly approve it.

"On the one hand, the international community is rattling its sabers," he said in his opening address. "On the other hand, it has made possible a political solution of the crisis. That is why the Geneva conference represents the only hope for the war to end."

Karadzic has said he will resign if the plan is rejected. He predicted the vote would be "very tight."

The draft includes boundaries drawn partly along ethnic lines and nine constitutional principles. It would mean the Serbs would have to give up their demand for a separate state within Bosnia and an eventual merger with neighboring Yugoslavia.

The international community has warned Serbs to accept unconditionally or risk military intervention.

Even if they accept, an agreement to halt the fighting would not be assured. Karadzic contended Tuesday the provincial borders were subject to negotiation.

Talks in Geneva could resume by Thursday if the Bosnian Serbs approve the plan. Vance and Owen were to travel Wednesday to Sarajevo.

"If the assembly says 'yes,' that will mean that the Serbs in Bosnia will not have their state, and that was the reason why this war was fought," said Biljana Plavsic, one of Karadzic's two vice presidents.

Assembly speaker Momcilo Krajisnik, warned, "We are now deciding between bad and worse, and either decision will have negative consequences for Serbs." Bosnia's Serb minority, backed initially by the Serb-dominated Yugoslav army, rebelled after the Muslim and Croat majority voted for independence last February.

of sex on their mind will look at a hickey as if they're watching Sharon Stone in 'Basic Instinct,'" Goulston said.

The new policy, approved last month by Clinicas' board of directors, requires that workers sporting hickies be sent home without pay. They may return when the hickey is gone or covered up, Ms. Tamez said.

Although the problem wasn't widespread at its three health care clinics, Clinicas formalized the rule to avoid misunderstandings and improve compliance,

Ms. Tamez said by telephone Wednesday.

A few workers objected when the policy was introduced during a staff meeting last week. "They said, basically, 'Isn't what we do on our time our business?'" Ms. Tamez recounted.

"We don't disagree with that at all," she said. "But at 8 or 9 o'clock, when they come in and don't meet certain standards of professionalism, then it's something we have to deal with."

People who show hickies may be displaying a rebellious streak, too, Goulston said.

And people who see the small marks could be distracted by big fantasies.

"Anything visual that triggers our imagination makes us feel uncomfortable," he said. "The more it's connected to sex, the more it triggers the thought of naked bodies and sex and contact."

"It's tough to get it out of your mind and out of your sight and get back to concentrating on something else," he said.

FALCON BASKETBALL

BOWLING GREEN vs BALL STATE

Men's hoops falls flat against the Cardinals

by Glen Lubbert
sports editor

When Ball State put the pressure on the men's basketball team in the second half, the Falcons folded, blinking only slightly as they fell 61-59 to the Cardinals.

BG, which falls to 3-2 in the Mid-American Conference, relinquished its league lead to the Cardinals and Western Michigan. It was not a performance head coach Jim Larranaga was pleased with.

floor again, the intensity and desire didn't return with them. After shooting 44 percent (11-of-25) in the first stanza, BG kept missing shots and returning for poor defense, according to Larranaga. Over the last 15 minutes, the Falcons, who were shooting 15-of-31 (48 percent) at that point, went 6-of-21 (29 percent) during the period.

"I told them at half-time that I was not interested in seeing us fall behind and then trying to play hard to catch up," Larranaga said. "I wanted us to go out a BG early on in the second half, finally grabbing the lead with 8:46 remaining in the game. BG forward Shane Kline-Ruminski, who had 10 points and 5 rebounds, fouled BSU's Steve Payne who hit both free-throw shots giving the Cardinals a 48-47 advantage. Payne managed a double-double knocking down 17 points while grabbing 12 rebounds.

"He did whatever he wanted to," Larranaga said about Payne. "We played like he's the man and we bought a ticket to watch him play."

The lead changed three times before a foul by guard Michael Huger put Payne on the charity stripe where he hit one of the two giving BSU a 51-50 lead. BG gasped for its final breath with 5:22 left when Kline-Ruminski knocked away Cardinal forward Jeermal Sylvester's shot. Guard Vada Burnett then drove inside and dished the ball off the forward James Cerisier. His shot was fouled and the hoop counted. Cerisier added the foul shot to give BG its final lead of the game, 53-51.

But the Cardinals answered with guard David Hall, who had only four points with 9:17 remaining. Over the next five minutes, Hall helped BSU dominate the Falcons as he scored 10 of the Cardinals 16 points. His efforts put Ball State up 55-53, a lead they would never relinquish.

"We missed a lot of easy shots," Larranaga said. "We put our heads down and felt sorry for ourselves tonight. We missed several layups. It was almost like we were looking for Ball State to block our shots. When you play that way, you're not the aggressor. When you keep reacting to the opponent, they obviously are the ones in control and your making all the adjustments."

The Falcons had several chances to win the game and gave a strong effort during the final two minutes, but it seemed they were giving their best just a little too late, according to Larranaga.

"We tried to do the same thing as the first half, but instead we stood around," Larranaga said.

"He did whatever he wanted to. We played like he's the man and we bought a ticket to watch him play."

Jim Larranaga on BSU forward Steve Payne's performance

"I was not very pleased with my team tonight and I told them so afterwards," Larranaga said. "I was not satisfied with their effort or their aggressiveness."

"And that should not have been the case. We were tied for first place and we should have played with a lot of confidence and a lot of determination. Instead, we just went through the motions and I'm extremely dissatisfied and not satisfied with our effort."

The Falcons kept control of the first half heading into the locker room 53-51, but when they hit the play hard right from the beginning of the second half, because even in the first half, we got outthusted. They outrebounded us.

"We don't seem to respond very well until we're behind five or ten points. Our defense didn't pick up until there were two or three minutes left in the game and we're behind and we're scrambling to try to stop them. And that's a very, very poor way to approach the game and we've done it repeatedly."

Ball State put the pressure on

The BG News/Theresa Thomas

BSU's Jamie Matthews steals the ball from BG's Shane Kline-Ruminski.

"We didn't play aggressively. We ended up not scoring and I had to adjust and change the line-up. You ask guys to come off the bench and give you a lift and they come in and just go through the motions...We just did not come ready to play. We didn't come ready to win the game. We just put in time tonight and we should have been a lot hungrier."

The lethargic play from the Falcons in the second half was most obvious by Huger, who scored 13 points in the first half but wasn't heard from until the final two minutes of the game. Huger finished with a team-high 17 points, but his scoring absence was a definite key to the Falcons defeat.

"I don't think he played very hard," Larranaga said about Huger. "He was dribbling around and being very passive. When guys like Shane Komives goes 1-for-5 and the only thing he makes is a lay-up, and Matt Otto

Women clip Cardinals, move into 1st-place tie

by Mark DeChant
sports writer

The women's basketball team needed to play only one half of last night's conference match-up against Ball State. Fortunately, the Falcons outscored the Cardinals 46-16 in that decisive half, the first, allowing Bowling Green to coast to its fourth Mid-American Conference win, 87-58.

BG (4-1 in the MAC, 9-4 overall) used first-half runs of 15-0 and 13-0 to keep Ball State (0-5, 0-12) a very safe distance away the entire contest.

Falcon head coach Jaci Clark said smart basketball was the key to her team opening up a huge lead (the largest margin was 37), and effectively blowing out a placid Cardinal squad.

"We took good shots at good times," Clark said. "We're getting the open shot, being patient."

After an early scoring lull for both teams, the Falcons finally established which team is ranked 30th in the nation by USA Today, and which team was heading towards a 30-point loss.

The Cardinals kept things interesting for the first four minutes of the contest. BSU took the game's first lead on a jumper by Dianne McConnell (13 points, 3 rebounds). 60 seconds later, two free throws by BG's Judit Lendvay and an inside jumper by Lori Albers put BG ahead to stay.

Joni Brown brought the Cardinals to within two when she nailed a jumper with 14:59 left in the half. However, the Cardinals' fortunes fell quickly and quietly over the next five minutes.

A 6-4 Falcon advantage ballooned to 21-4 when BG slapped the handcuffs on the Cardinal offensive game, and scored without a challenge at the other end. The 15 unanswered Falcon points included three consecutive layups, a tribute to the tight full-court press employed by Coach Clark.

"Our pressure I think bothered them a little bit and helped us get some quick baskets early," Clark said. "We needed to play fundamental and I think we did that for the most part."

The Falcon guards continued to harass Ball State throughout the first half, as BG's lead increased rapidly. Lori Albers hit four of four free throws on route to 10 first-half points. Albers was the only player in double digits at intermission, as Clark freely substituted her younger players.

"Anytime you can get a little bit of rest, I think, is good," Clark said. "But it was important that they played together, and get that confidence back."

"We took good shots at good times."

Jaci Clark

BG was never challenged in the second half by the Cardinals, who nearly upset 4-1 Western Michigan earlier in the season.

Ball State head coach Robyn Markey took the loss in stride, crediting Bowling Green's overall talent and experience and expressing hope for her own squad.

"(BG) did a great job on the boards - they outrebounded us by 13," she said. "They shot the ball extremely well all night. Like I said they are a very good team, a very explosive team."

"I was just pleased with our second half, I would like to say that," Markey said. "We shot the ball extremely well and we executed on offense. It's just that when you go down by thirty, that's tough to overcome." Bowling Green was led by Judit Lendvay, who scored 16 points (7 of 10 shooting). Albers ended the game with 14, and Andrea Nordmann tallied 11.

Freshman Jenny Kulics, getting her first extended playing time of the season, dished off four assists in 28 minutes, and added six points.

For the Cardinals, Kristy Cherry matched McConnell's 13-point effort, and Ramonda James grabbed nine rebounds.

Kulics appreciates PT

by Mark DeChant
sports writer

One person's misfortune can be another's lucky break.

Such was the case in the point guard situation at last night's women's basketball game.

Superstar Susie Cassell, a senior enjoying an outstanding season for BG this year, was limited to only four minutes last night, due to sickness. The next point guard on the depth chart is freshman Jenny Kulics, who had played only 114 total minutes going into last night's contest.

Cassell started the game, as usual, but her illness forced head coach Jaci Clark to go with Kulics early and often. Clark felt no apprehension about making the move, and was pleased with the 5-6 guard's performance.

"She had a good game," Clark said. "She stepped up and played big for us. Losing Susie could have been very dangerous."

In 10 first-half minutes, Kulics made two of the four shots she attempted, and had only a pair of turnovers. Kulics said she felt no different about this game than any other.

"I was nervous as usual," she said. "But, I'm glad I got some playing time."

"Actually, I didn't even expect (the extra minutes), because I didn't know the doctor said (Cassell) couldn't play much."

Kulics played with aggression all over the floor, and was instrumental in the pressure defense that led the Falcons to victory. She ended the game with 6 points, 2 rebounds, 4 assists, and 3 steals. Both she and her coach believe that game-time experience is important for maturation.

"She's a good player," Clark said. "And she needs to experience a game situation to understand what type of pressure is involved, and to help us make good decisions."

"She's got to understand that she's expected to run the team if she's up at the point guard position. And she also has to realize her responsibilities at the off-guard spot."

Kulics said her assist to turnover ratio (4:8 last night) will improve with increased opportunities to play.

"Practice is just so different than a game," she said. "Getting experience will help my turnovers, and help the way I feel before the game, too."

Who loves New York?

CHICAGO — What is it with New York and sports celebrities, anyway? How come everybody still takes the calls, but nobody takes the job anymore?

Up until Tuesday, there was reason to think this love-hate relationship was strictly a "baseball thing." That free agents like David Cone, Barry Bonds and Greg Maddux, after being wined and dined in New York, chose Kansas City, San Francisco and Atlanta instead because the memories were still fresh of how Yankee acquisition Ed Whitson was once chased across a parking lot by angry fans and how Met Bobby Bonilla lost 50 points off his batting average in just one year.

But no. Tuesday brought the suggestion that it is becoming a "football thing" as well.

Barely two weeks after Tom Coughlin said he wouldn't leave Boston College for the New York Giants job, Dallas defensive coordinator Dave Wannstedt, who was courted even more energetically as a successor to the fired Ray Handley, turned up in Chicago to take Mike Ditka's old job instead.

When asked to explain why he chose this town over that one, Wannstedt showed some nimble footwork for a guy who spends most of his time plotting how to stop it.

"The Giants are a great football organization," he said. "Everybody knows that."

But a moment later, he said, "Chicago has always been a team I've really respected an awful lot. It was just a great opportunity for me."

And a few moments after that, with his wife at his side and two teen-age daughters somewhere in the back of his mind, Wannstedt added, "Personally, with my family, we're excited about living in Chicago."

Now, whether it's the result of genetics or environment, New Yorkers are a very suspicious people. And there was plenty in this latest rejection to be suspicious about.

Beside the warm and fuzzy, however, there was one more related fact that almost certainly figured into the equation. Wannstedt apparently plans to take several other members of the Dallas staff to his new job locale, and he knows he is much more likely to get permission if the whole lot of them open shop in the NFC Central.

So, assuming the money was equal in both places, what else came into play?

Some people assumed that Wannstedt would choose New York, if only because he would accept much more readily following a bust like Handley instead of a legend like Ditka. But they did not realize that Wannstedt does not scare easily and that he had a front-row seat to watch Johnson crawl out from Tom Landry's long shadow in Dallas in only four seasons.

Smith ruins Ohio State's rep

Within the past seven months, the Ohio State University has seen the departure of its two most prized student-athletes: Jimmy Jackson and Robert Smith. The manner in which they left, however, is quite different.

Aside from a national championship, Jackson accomplished as much as anyone could have ever asked. He began his career by winning the Freshman of the Year award in the Big Ten for the 1989-90 season. He went on to become a two-time Player of the Year in the conference and, in his final campaign in 1990-91, he led his team to the prized Final Four.

It was at this point that he was forced to make the most difficult and yet, most important decision of his life: play his senior season and graduate or forego the final year of his eligibility and enter the June NBA draft.

Well, when looking at the whole picture, the decision should have been easy and unquestionable.

In an emotional press conference, Jackson announced he was going to the draft due to a financial obligation he felt he owed his family. He expressed sincere remorse in leaving his coach, Randy Ayers, and his good friends on the team, but he had to do what he had to do.

Robert Smith, in his career, has had a striking resemblance to that of Jackson. He too, was Freshman of the Year in the 1990 Big Ten football season when he eclipsed two-time Heisman Trophy winner Archie

Russ Eckard

Griffin's school rushing record for freshman. In his 'two' years of playing, he led the Buckeyes in rush attempts and rushing yardage, and he was also the team's most valuable player in the 1990 and 1992 bowl games.

After this past season, Smith followed in Jackson's footsteps and declared his eligibility for the NFL draft.

It is here, however, that all comparisons must end.

All along, Jackson kept out of trouble and did as he should. Smith, on the other hand, was the definition of trouble and by entering the professional draft, declared himself the biggest hypocrite this country's seen since 'evangelist' Jim Bakker.

If this was true, it was indeed an injustice to Smith. However, almost immediately following the firing of Uzelac, Smith was back. His return and Uzelac's departure couldn't have anything to do with the fact that Uzelac openly stated that with a plethora of talented running backs, he was going to try and always keep fresh legs in the game and, in turn, cut down on Smith's carries ... could it?

Furthermore, Smith insisted that his only goal in life was to earn his degree from the fine Ohio State institution and go on to med-school so he could be a doctor and help 'others'.

Then, all of a sudden, with a new NFL agreement pending in which a rookie salary cap would be implemented, Smith jumps ship with over a year left until he could get his all-important degree.

How hypocritical can a person get?

Meanwhile, Jackson was drafted fourth by the Dallas Mavericks, who this season have redefined futility. As a matter of fact, before Tuesday's victory over the Rodman-less Pistons, the Mavs had exactly as many victories on the season as head coaches - two.

And what's even worse is that they didn't sign Jackson when they had the chance to. Although they had over four million dollars to work with under the salary cap, they couldn't even offer a franchise player like JJ market-value, comparable to what third pick Christian Laettner received.

So Jackson decided to pass on the Mavericks and re-enter the draft next year. Wouldn't you? His decision also presents no threat to his promise of giving his family the financial stability they lack, and he even decided to go back to the Buckeye state and finish his education.

I applaud Jimmy Jackson for the things he did for Ohio State and for the things he has continued to do (by the way, I don't buy the story of three hooligans in Columbus who probably only want to disgrace someone who is more than they'll ever be).

In the same breath I curse Robert Smith and wish him the worst of luck in both the football world and, if he ever gets there, the medical field as well. Shame on you, you lowly hypocrite, for all you are and stand for.

Barkley's burst to cost $40,000

The Associated Press

NEW YORK -- Charles Barkley's latest violation of NBA rules will cost him about $40,000.

The Phoenix Suns forward was suspended for one game without pay by the NBA and fined $10,000 Wednesday for vaulting over a scorer's table and arguing with an official.

Barkley's behavior in Monday's 106-103 loss to the New York Knicks was criticized by NBA vice president Rod Thorn, who issued the penalties. Barkley was to miss Wednesday night's game against the Cleveland Cavaliers at Richfield, Ohio.

Based on his salary of $2.42 million this season, Barkley will lose about $29,500 in salary. Including the pay loss, he has been fined more than $140,000 since 1989.

"I made a mistake and they're going to suspend me for the game," Barkley said. "I just have to deal with it. ... I don't think it warranted a suspension. But I know what they got to do. They got to keep people coming, so they've got to control the image of the league. So I understand that."

Barkley missed a shot in the final seconds against the Knicks but thought he was fouled. He leaped over the scorer's table and chased official Jim Clark after the game following an exchange of words.

"Our rules are clear that players and coaches are to go immediately from the court to the locker room, both at halftime and at the end of the game, without any discussion with the game officials," Thorn said. "Conduct such as Charles displayed on Monday cannot be tolerated."

Barkley shot an airball on a 3-point shot with 11 seconds left, then complained he had been fouled by Anthony Mason. As the game ended, Barkley continued his argument with Clark. When warned by Clark that the outburst would cost him money, Barkley went wild, taking off after the official, who was already heading for the exit ramp leading to the dressing room.

Madison Square Garden security blocked Barkley's path, but later he denied that he had anything violent in mind. He said part of the reason he was penalized was that the incident occurred close to the NBA's offices.

"Being in New York has something to do with everything," Barkley said.

While with the Philadelphia 76ers last season, Barkley was fined $10,000 and suspended for one game for spitting at a fan. In 1990, he paid $39,000 in fines, including $20,000 for a fight with Bill Laimbeer of the Detroit Pistons and $5,000 for a bet with Mark Jackson, then of the New York Knicks. Barkley was fined $45,000 the previous season.

"It's over now," Barkley said. "It really doesn't matter, if you do something wrong in life, it really doesn't matter if you regret it or not. It's over with. You just have to deal with the repercussions."

Fred L. Slaughter, general counsel of the National Association of Basketball Referees, welcomed the suspension, saying fines weren't enough to deal with Barkley's behavior. "Union sentiment existed for the assessment of a longer suspension," an NABR statement said.

Bills before Bowl: no comment

The Associated Press

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. -- The Buffalo Bills will try anything to change their Super Bowl luck.

Unlike past seasons, when their penchant for speaking first and thinking later got them in trouble, the Bills are allowing others to talk while they concentrate on winning.

The Bills, losers of the last two Super Bowls, said trash talk by playoff opponents Houston, Pittsburgh and Miami helped motivate them on their path to a Super Bowl matchup against the Dallas Cowboys on Jan. 31.

"We learned a lot last year in the Super Bowl," nose tackle Jeff Wright said, referring to the Bill's 37-24 loss to Washington. "You can't talk a good game. You've got to show up. Maybe we talked too much and didn't show up."

Last year, several Bills popped off during the week leading up to their game against the Washington Redskins. Defensive end Bruce Smith was angered by hate mail he termed "racist," running back Thurman Thomas crusaded for more respect, tight end Butch Rolle complained about lack of playing time and defensive end Leon Seals wanted out of Buffalo.

"I think experience helps, and maturity, and that's what's happened here," center Kent Hull said after the Bills' 29-10 win over the Dolphins in the AFC championship.

"The guys who were doing the talking -- Louis Oliver, Bryan Cox, Marco Coleman -- these are young guys," Thomas said. "They've got to be more careful what they say because if you say stuff about an individual or an organization or a team ... all it does is motivate the players and that's exactly what it did for us."
